HMC Architects Hires Craig Windsor, AIA, As a Senior Project Manager for Its K-12 Education Practice

ONTARIO, Calif., November 2007—Craig Windsor, AIA, has joined HMC Architects as an associate and senior project manager. He will be based out of the firm's Ontario office as the latest addition to the firm's K-12 education practice.

"Craig has a unique perspective on the design process," stated Alexandra Parslow, vice president of HMC's K-12 education practice. "He thrives on a comprehensive approach to any project, working hands-on with clients from planning through construction."

With more than 35 years of experience in institutional architecture, Windsor is known for his strong leadership and client communication skills. He is committed to team building and process management systems that bring success to his projects. "It's about the team," he says. "The key is assembling the proper group of individuals to meet a client's specific set of needs, using each team member to maximize the effect on the entire process."

Windsor's dedication to the "design-construction continuum"—a term he coined to summarize the entire project process—makes him an invaluable component of HMC's ongoing K-12 practice development. Much of his career has focused on the delivery of large-scale projects, including work with El Monte City School District, Beverly Hills Unified School District, Duarte Unified School District, La Canada Unified School District, and the Monrovia Unified School District.

From 1993 to 2005, Windsor served as principal and president of Glendale, Calif.-based Osborn Architects. He is an active member of the American Institute of Architects (AIA).

Throughout its history, HMC Architects has established a reputation as an award-winning design firm and thought leader for education, healthcare, and government facilities. Founded in 1940, HMC is one of the largest planning and design firms headquartered in California with offices strategically located throughout the West.
